Dante & Holly — Disclosure Workflow

Two swimlanes, start to finish: the paralegal drafts and the lawyer approves. Diamonds are decision points; gold hexagons are handoffs where one person must finish before the other continues.

 Dante (paralegal) Holly (lawyer) Handoff point Decision / approval

If the diagram doesn't render, open this file in an up-to-date browser with an internet connection (the Mermaid renderer loads from a CDN).

File naming is set up front

Dante names the file the moment it's created — date, description, and his initial (D). Every later touch appends an initial, building the revision trail.

Two approval gates

Dante's "ready for Holly?" check, and Holly's "approve?" decision. Nothing moves forward until the person owning that gate signs off.

Folder moves mark progress

To Be Disclosed → Disclosures (+ Attachments) → Done. The folder a document sits in always tells you its stage.

Clio is the final destination

Only the approved, finalised document is exported to Clio for filing/serving — the clean system of record.
